Are your children spending time with strangers and sharing personal information with the world? You may not think so, but if they are using the Internet or today's technology, they might be. The Internet is a great resource but also poses some great dangers!! As parents, we need to know about these dangers so we can protect our children.

On February 23, 2010, Scott Driscoll of Internet Safety Concepts will talk to parents about Internet/technology safety and how to keep our children safe. Mr. Driscoll has taught thousands of parents and children about Internet/technology safety and has investigated numerous crimes against children on line. The information that will be shared at this presentation is a must for every parent whether you have a first grader, fifth grader, high school student or a child anywhere in between. (This presentation is not for children.)
